Excerpt from The Story of Susanna Hutchinson: Indian Captive

“I was about nineteen years old when I was taken captive by the Indians. I was living with my family in Lancaster, Massachusetts, when a group of Native Americans attacked our settlement. My father was killed in the attack, and my mother and I were taken prisoner.

We were taken to an Indian village, where we were forced to work as slaves. We were given little food and clothing, and we were often beaten. I was constantly in fear for my life, and I knew that if I tried to escape, I would be killed.

One day, after I had been held captive for about a year, I was able to escape. I ran away from the village and hid in the woods. I wandered for several days, until I finally came to a settlement of English colonists.

I was taken in by the colonists, and they helped me to return to my family. I was overjoyed to be reunited with my mother, but I was also deeply saddened by the loss of my father.

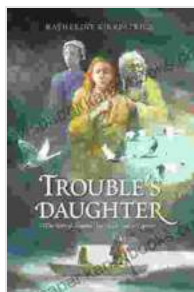

I never forgot my time in captivity, and I often told my story to others. I wanted people to know about the suffering that Native Americans had inflicted on English settlers, and I wanted to warn them about the dangers of living on the frontier.

My story is a reminder of the brutality of frontier warfare, and it is a testament to the courage and resilience of those who survived it.”
